Speaking on

“Teaching (Francophone) Canada at a Transboundary University”

What are the opportunities and challenges in teaching about Canada at a transboundary, west-coast American university? We'll delve into how pedagogy shifted to meet the needs of Western Washington University's student body, described as both culturally and globally naïve but desperate for social and personally impactful reform. We'll look at the attitudes toward Francophone Canada remains underrepresented at the French programmatic level and also at the institutional level and what this signals for the future of Canadian Studies at Western Washington University.
