Speaking on

Meaningful, Inclusive First-Year Researched Writing at Plattsburgh: An English Composition Perspective

Dr. Friedrich will report on his qualitative research on teaching autoethnographic research to students in Plattsburgh's first-year composition program. The presentation will concentrate on describing the theoretical foundations of this methodology as well as the composition program's autoethnographic research task's core components. He will turn his fieldnotes on teaching autoethnography and interviews with former students to highlight common themes suggesting the meaningful, inclusive nature of this work for Plattsburgh's First-Year student writers.
