Speaking on

“Museum Collections and Public Display”

Almost every campus museum manages artwork beyond gallery spaces: in buildings, offices, classrooms, and sometimes even dorm rooms. Managing a collection is always challenging, but a collection that is spread across multiple buildings in unmonitored spaces is a herculean task not just for museum staff, but for many departments across a college campus. Making art accessible to campus communities can garner institutional pride, but enthusiasm for such programs directly relates to how well the work is cared for and presented. Learn more about how museum staff here at SUNY Plattsburgh are working toward mission-centric educational goals while working to ensure appropriate care and presentation of the art on display around campus.
